IV. Report of the Steering Committee, S. Lewis

The Faculty Senate Steering Committee has met once with President Barron and three additional times since the last Faculty Senate meeting.

At our meeting on September 24th, Dustin Daniels, President of the Student Government Association, presented a proposal he is supporting that would increase the opportunities for students to engage in service learning. This proposal includes two major strategies, the first of which is to identify courses that have been approved as satisfying the University's multicultural credit and encourage the course instructors to incorporate service learning into the requirements students must meet. Alternatively, instructors of courses that have service learning requirements, but that have not been submitted for approval as either an x or y course, would be approached about the possibility of applying for the multicultural designation. Some funding would be available to support faculty in making these changes to their courses. This matter was referred to the Undergraduate Policy Committee for their review.

President Barron asked the Steering Committee to submit names of possible individuals to serve on the Search Committee for the soon-to-be vacant Provost's position. After brainstorming, a long list of names of distinguished faculty was forwarded to Dr. Barron. The search process was further discussed with the president during our meeting with him on October 1st. He reported that he has signed a contract with the executive search firm Witt/Kieffer and that they are estimating that the search will take approximately 4.5 months, with the goal of having a new Provost named by March and working in May. At the time of our meeting, the President had not made a decision about naming an interim Provost to handle that position between the retirement of Dr. Abele in December and the employment of his replacement.

In addition, we were encouraged to learn that Dr. Barron plans to take an active role in the P&T process, indicating that he will be reading the faculty binders.

The President spoke about his excitement related to the new Capital Campaign. The Steering Committee offered to assist in this endeavor by identifying ways to get faculty and staff involved, both as donors and solicitors of funding. It was noted that in order to be successful, it will be important to designate projects that are of interest to faculty and staff to encourage their giving, such as the creation of a fund to support scholarships for the children of staff. The Steering Committee plans to meet with Tom Jennings, the new Vice President of University Advancement concerning the Capital Campaign, soon.

On another matter, the Steering Committee has extended an invitation to Kirby Kemper to join us at a meeting to discuss concerns that faculty have raised about the IRB process.

Parking on the east end of campus was raised as an issue when it became known that faculty and staff were not receiving adequate notice from Parking Services that spaces in the lot near the Fine Arts Building were going to be regularly reserved for events. Parking Services will be reminded of the importance of letting faculty know as far in advance as possible when spaces in the lot are not going to be available.

Just as a point of information, the Steering Committee has invited Dr. Cary Nelson, President of the American Association of University Professors, to speak to the Faculty Senate at our January meeting, which will be held on January 19th, while he is visiting the FSU campus.

The 2010 Fall Meeting of the General Faculty will be held on Tuesday, October 26th in the Turnbull Center at 3:00. A reception will follow. The Faculty Senate Steering Committee urges you to try to attend this important event, at which Dr. Barron will be providing his Presidential State of the University Address.

We heard a report from the Council of Deans meeting on October 14. Two topics from that meeting are of particular interest to faculty: 1) the new contract with the graduate student union and its potential impact on faculty workload in terms of personnel paperwork; and 2) renewed monitoring of teaching performance by means of SPOT data. We will follow developments on the first issue and discuss the second issue with the President on Friday of this week.

As was reported at the last Faculty Senate meeting, Dr. Joseph Beckham will be stepping down in January from his position as Faculty Athletic Representative and Chair of the University Athletic Board. He has served as the Faculty representative for FSU to the NCAA and the ACC during some difficult times, always as an advocate of the importance of the academic engagement of our student athletes. Before we ask him to deliver one last report on today's agenda, we want to formally acknowledge his contributions. Please join me in extending our thanks to Joe for his skillful service in this key role.

We have one item to bring before you for a vote. Another issue brought to the attention of the Steering Committee by the Student Government Association was the resolution passed by the SGA to make FSU a Breathe Easy campus. As such, smoking would be permitted only in certain locations on campus. The Steering Committee recommends that the Senate adopt the following resolution, which has been passed by the Student Senate:

Be it resolved, in conjunction with the Healthy Campus 2020 initiative, the Florida State University Breathe Easy Committee, and the vast majority of the Florida State student body, that the Faculty Senate urges the administration to immediately transition to a Breathe Easy Campus and establish official Designated Smoking Areas.

The resolution passes unanimously.

V. Reports of Standing Committees

There were no reports of Standing Committees.

VI. Special Order: University Athletic Board, J. Beckham

I last reported to the Faculty Senate on March 24, 2010, detailing the organizational structure of the Florida State University Athletic Board and the aftermath of NCAA sanctions imposed following the truncated process of resolving major violations related to academic misconduct. At that time, I emphasized that our intercollegiate athletics program offers benefits to our student-athletes, the campus and the larger community; however, vigilance is needed to ensure that our intercollegiate athletic program is managed in a way that complies with NCAA policies and aligns with the broader mission of the University.

New Members

At the beginning of the fall term, the President appointed four new faculty members to the Athletic Board. They are Dr. Wayne Hochwarter, College of Business; Dr. Alex Piquero, Criminology; Dr. James Sickinger, Classics; and Dr. Eric Stewart, Criminology. This brings the number of faculty on the Athletic Board to sixteen, not including the President of the Faculty Senate, who serves ex officio. The Athletic Board consists of twenty-five members appointed by the President of the University and eight ex officio members.

Academics

Each year, the Athletic Board reviews student-athlete performance using two NCAA measures. Graduation success rate (GSR) describes the graduation results over a six-year period for a specific entering cohort of scholarship student-athletes with adjustments for transfers in good academic standing. [For example, if 100 scholarship athletes entered and 60 graduated within six years, the GSR would be 60%.] The measure is intended to represent the graduation results for student-athletes who have completed their competitive eligibility and are no longer enrolled. The most recently reported GSRⁱ for FSU student-athletes consists of the cohorts of entering freshmen for the years 1999-2000, 2000-2001, 2001-2002, 2002-2003. The overall GSR for FSU Athletics was 79 percent, which is consistent with conference standards and reflects modest but continuing improvement in graduation rates for our student athletes. The NCAA reported the following GSR for selected sports: Baseball-81%, Men's Basketball-80%, Women's Basketball-67% and Football-73%.

Academic Progress Rate (APR) involves an annual assessment of team academic performance, awarding two points each term for retention and eligibility for each scholarship student-athlete. APR is calculated using the total points earned at the end of the academic year divided by total points possible and multiplied by 1000. [For example, if ten scholarship athletes participated in women's cross country for a given academic year and eight of the scholarship athletes maintained eligibility and remained in school for both semesters, while two scholarship athletes were academically ineligible after the second semester, the possible points would be forty and the points earned would be thirty-eight. Divide 38 by 40 and multiply by 1000 to get an APR of 950.] NCAA penalties may apply for falling below 925 points. For the most recent reporting period, released by the NCAA in the spring of 2010, no Florida State University Athletic team fell below 925. In fact, no FSU team has fallen below the 925 APR since the inception of these measures. The NCAA reported the following APR for selected FSU sports: Baseball-933, Football-927, Men's Basketball-944, and Women's Basketball-957. Should a particular sport fall below 925, the Athletic Board would work with the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics to fashion an APR improvement plan for the particular sport.

With the application of GSR and APR metrics, as well as increased standards for student-athlete continuing eligibility and heightened requirements for prospective student-athlete initial eligibility, there is optimism that academic reform of intercollegiate athletics will continue. On the national scene, several sports with historically low APRs have come under scrutiny over the last few years and academic enhancement initiatives have been undertaken or are being considered by the NCAA. Academic enhancement initiatives in Baseball,ⁱⁱ implemented over a year ago, appear to have had a salutary impact on the sport's APR. NCAA legislative proposals to enhance academic preparation and continuing eligibility in Men's Basketball and Football are currently before the NCAA for adoption.

Finances

Budget proposals submitted by the FSU Director of Intercollegiate Athletics continue to emphasize fiscal austerity and cost control. The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics receives no funding from the University's operating budget and contributes to the university's operating budget through student-athlete scholarships ($7,704,795), administrative overhead fees ($956,904), and other transfers intended to support the institution's mission (e.g. $100,000 bowl proceeds transfer).ⁱⁱⁱ

The Budget Committee of the Athletic Board submitted its recommendation to endorse the 2010-2011 operating budget for intercollegiate athletics in May of this year and the Athletics Board approved the recommendation. The 2010-2011 total operating budget is $54,990,836.

A continuing concern is that athletic revenues from all sources have not kept pace with expenses. Each year, the deficit is reconciled through a transfer from Seminoles Boosters. The projected Booster transfer in 2009-10 was $10.7 million, although the actual transfer was 8.4 million. The projected Booster transfer for 2010-11 is 10.7 million.

Beginning in 2011-12, FSU Athletics will benefit from an increase of $3.8 million related to television rights to ACC football and basketball. The former agreement with the ACC's television partners was for $78 million per year, the recently negotiated contract with ESPN is $130 million. The increase will be divided twelve ways after the conference takes 11.5%. This contract is anticipated to increase by 3% each year for twelve years. These funds will be needed to meet the operating costs of a potential indoor practice facility for football, the start-up of the women's sand volleyball program, coaching salaries and bonuses, stadium maintenance and other upkeep and renovations to athletic facilities.

Trends across the country indicate revenue growth in Football Bowl Subdivision (FBS) programs, but expenses continue to grow faster than revenues. Escalating costs are attributable to several factors, including rising tuition rates and coaching salaries. Increases in salaries for coaches and the proliferation of non-coaching personnel in athletic development have been major concerns for the NCAA and the Knight Commission. Rising travel costs are a particular problem for FSU, which is in a small market for air travel and must often charter to meet NCAA requirements for team travel and limit missed class time for student-athletes.

Equity and Student Welfare

The Athletic Board has approved the adoption of Women's Sand Volleyball as a new intercollegiate sport beginning in the fall of 2011. The addition of this sport will enable the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics to demonstrate "a history and continuing practice of program expansion for the under-represented sex" under the regulatory framework of Title IX. The initial costs to begin this program are estimated at $320,000.

The Equity and Student Welfare Committee surveyed our student-athlete population in the spring of this year and completed a salary equity study of the Intercollegiate Athletics Department. In addition, coaches and student-athletes had the opportunity to meet with the committee at intervals over the course of the spring term to discuss particular issues. Results of the electronic survey indicated that most of the student-athletes responding [n=164, response rate 26%] rated their experience as good to excellent [all averaged responses were above 4.0 on a 5 point scale]. Following a comparison of our coaching salaries with those of ACC counterparts, the committee determined that our coaching salaries are at or above the conference mean.

NCAA Sanctions

The Athletics Department and the University have taken all necessary steps to implement corrective measures in response to major infractions reported to the NCAA in the fall of 2007.

ACC Collaborative

The ACC presidents have encouraged academic and other collaborations as part of the Inter-institutional Academic Collaborative (IAC). The IAC coordinates these efforts, which are funded by a portion of the revenue from the ACC football championship. The IAC emphasizes international and global affairs, especially study abroad and research in areas of the world where it is not feasible for a single institution to sustain a full program. Other collaborative areas are Ph.D. student exchanges, a roundtable of chief technology officers, and an annual conference in which undergraduate research projects are presented. FSU served as the host for one of the undergraduate research conferences in April of 2008 and two Florida State University students were awarded the University's first Atlantic Coast Conference (ACC) Fellowships for Undergraduate Research in 2010.

Current Initiatives

The Athletic Board will continue to pursue the following key goals during the 2010-2011 fiscal year.

- Continuing review of all phases of the Athletic Academic Student Services unit by the Academic Committee.
- Development and administration of the annual student-athlete satisfaction survey by the Equity and Student Welfare Committee.
- Review of the athletics budget by the Budget Committee.
- Adoption of an express policy on student-athlete travel and athletic competition designed to minimize lost class time, including final exam periods.

Faculty Athletic Representative

Over the summer of 2010, I informed President Barron of my plans to step down as Faculty Athletic Representative. After broad consultation, including input from the Vice-Presidents and the Faculty Senate Steering Committee, the President announced that Dr. Pam Perrewe will assume this role in January of 2011. Dr. Perrewe is the Haywood and Betty Taylor Eminent Scholar of Business Administration and Distinguished Research Professor at Florida State University. She is the current chair of the Athletic Board's Equity and Student Welfare Committee.

VIII. Special Order: Announcements by President Barron

I thought I'd make a couple of comments in case you were interested about some of the big ideas and discussions we've been having because, well, you've heard about it from different directions but I thought I would avail myself for any questions if anyone has comments so that I hear from you and you hear from me, so rather than doing a formal presentation... I thought I would briefly present to you this "big idea" concept.

There's no way you can go anywhere and get five million or fifty million if you don't have a good idea. And many many times you're standing there talking to someone--this is quite interesting because this occurred Friday before the game, with a donor that said “This is really interesting but don’t you have any big ideas for me to think about?” And it turned out that particular dean is really working on this and said, “Well I have three really good ones” and the person got really excited. But there are sometimes when someone says “This is not what I want to do.” But most of the time they want to connect what they are interested in with what the university wants to do, and they want to feel like it has impact. And sometimes a 50 million dollar idea, you’re never going to get 50 million dollars, but it can be broken up into different parts and you can fund the different components.

We don’t want to launch a big campaign unless we have a lot of ideas out there.. So I asked all the colleges with all the deans to be ready to present the big ideas, and as you know I did an all-campus call for big ideas as well. I will tell you they number in the hundreds as far as response. As some of them are charmingly simple (“let’s have ten minutes of laugh time every day and do it campus-wide”), all the way to serious, more thoughtful topics. And I must admit, reading through the list, it’s good to see one that has a bit of humor too.

We had a dean’s retreat on Monday. And the Deans and I spent about seven hours together, going through one presentation after another of big ideas. And the idea here was for Deans to see what other Deans were thinking about doing and what ideas they had that were bubbling up. And to be able to react to them, but also see things that are synergistic across the campus because sometimes that presents a different type of opportunity. What we want is for each college to have an opportunity for their ideas, and that college to be able to draw in the donor. And I need to have a sense of what it is the colleges are doing. But it was fun, because we saw the different areas the deans wanted to investigate further. And so there are teams of Deans that are writing white papers right now on certain topics. Just to give you an example, HHN1 fund. Because it just seems like there’s so many parts of a university that are looking at this particular issue, and it may be compelling for the state of FL and the nation, and so we’ll look inside that. Or internationalizing our programs, and we’re not talking about study abroad, it’s just the number of times that we heard the Deans sit there and talk about the importance of this. And I’ll just give you an example: the college of Education, that we should be looking at different models of education across the world, what can we learn from them.

So nothing is set on this front just yet,, but we’re going to come up with 5 or 10 of these. We are going to look carefully through the individual contributions and see if these are also compelling ideas that perhaps we should get on the table that for some reason or other didn’t. And colleges can have multiple big ideas and we can test an idea and discover we can’t sell it to anybody, and replace it with another idea.

One of the things I’ve discovered is if you have a good idea and you believe in that idea, then you switch from “Can I do this philanthropically?” to “where can I get this done?” And so you find funding off a federal contract or you could be sitting there talking to a legislator and say “This may be something quite worthwhile for the state to be doing.” Or it turns out you’re sitting there and there are several corporations there and you have something to pitch.

So good ideas tend to have their own kind of leadership once you've gotten them in circulation. Now I know it's somewhat challenging because the campus has gone through this recent contraction and stress, and now we are sitting here talking about "what are the big things we can do?" And we don't know if we'll have a successful year with the legislature or whether we'll take another big hit. But I believe we don't go anywhere if you aren't prepared to say to those legislators "Here's what we want to do, here's why we want to do it".

We're going to test market these "big ideas" with some donors, so by November 5th we should have maybe 50 different people from colleges that are in town. And they are going to listen to some of these ideas that are out there and they're going to give us their opinion, and we'll turn around and those people will also help provide gifts when they become committed to these ideas when a campaign starts. But we'll test market those ideas and we'll spring them on everyone, and we'll probably be talking to everyone about them to get everybody's reaction to them: "This is a good idea, this one makes sense." We'll see how it goes.

I just wanted to take a moment about the big ideas discussion and how it's going about, and I'll take questions about that. And I'll be serious about what I said earlier, I'll take any questions.

Dr. Walker-Any updates as to where we are on the Provost Search Committee?

I got quite a large number of nominations including a student nomination just came in this week. I'm hoping that I will have a list of people I wish to ask by Friday. I believe it is the 4th of November. We have actually signed the contract with Witt/Kieffer, and on the 4th of November we will meet and they are hoping to be able to meet with a committee. So there will be an announcement very soon.

Collective Bargaining

Tomorrow's bargaining session – 2pm at the FSU Training Center – may be the last substantive session of this round of negotiations, negotiations that started in January. It has been a tough bargaining environment, and faculty support for our UFF-FSU faculty bargaining team has been, as always, critical. We hope to announce details and ratification voting plans soon.

ⁱⁱ Under the new standards, players must be academically certified for the fall term in order to play the next spring. This has encouraged players to take more courses during the season and in summer school. In addition, players must now have a year in residence if they transfer from one school to another. Teams may offer a maximum of 11.7 scholarships per roster, but under the new rule each player will now receive a minimum of the equivalent of 33% of a grant-in-aid. The maximum number of players who can be on scholarship will be 27. Previously, there was no limit. Finally, playing schedules for teams that fall below an APR score of 900 will be reduced by 10%. Teams currently can play 56 games, which would thus be reduced to 50.
